A little something to make your day a little brighter."We were able to confirm that 6 percent of infants at risk for hereditary breast and ovarian cancer are positive for a BRCA1 or BRCA2 mutation. "Only 1 percent of the women who are carriers of a BRCA1 or BRCA2 mutation have symptoms of breast or ovarian cancer. "Unfortunately, these women may not be aware of their risk, so they must be informed of their status." Risk factors Ms. Rahal said women with certain risk factors are at increased risk of developing breast cancer before age 50. Women with these risk factors include having a BRCA mutation, being under age 40, having a first-degree relative with breast cancer, being under age 50, having a strong family history of breast cancer or ovarian cancer, a strong family history of male breast cancer, being of Ashkenazi Jewish descent, having had one or more first-degree relatives with a male breast cancer, having had bilateral prophylactic oophorectomy, or having a personal history of another cancer diagnosis, such as melanoma. Ms. Rahal said she has several family members who have had breast cancer and ovarian cancer. She also has a brother who had testicular cancer and another brother with lung cancer. 82157476af
